

Dead Acres Is The Place To Be

Tonight at our weekly haunted house production meeting, those of us who ventured to Ghostly Manor discussed our satisfaction with the experience and evaluated what we thought could be done with our fright fest. We were advised to check the website for another well-reviewed house of horror in Ohio, just considerably farther than Sandusky. It seems that a location just east of Columbus in Pataskala, Dead Acres is a high ranking house dealing in the macabre. On its website, it has a list of warnings that apparently should be heeded. For instance, if you are in the least bit skeptical about whether or not to bring your children, you should LEAVE THEM BEHIND. There is an addendum that states that the actors involved may occasionally come into direct contact with the visitors (something that our group was warned against doing) but that they should not try to become aggressive in return. One aspect of this house that caught my eye is the haunted hospital wing. So, as the month of ghoulish happenings, creepy things that go bump in the night, and other horrifying spectacles approaches, be sure to visit your area house of horror.
