

I'm not that much of a geek...

There are some tech that this computer geek isn't into. The biggest one is the cell phone. I have one to use as a phone. I don't text, take pictures, play games, download songs or read my email on my cell phone. I don't want one with a full keyboard. I don't want a touch screen model. If I had my way, my phone would only be a phone.

I had an PDA for a while, but after a time I just quit using it. I had calendars and note taking software on my computers. I did not replace it with a blackberry or i-phone.

The cell phone is even pushing it for me. The only reason I picked it up was to have a way for my girls to get in touch with me. Being a single dad, this was important. The latest phone I have does include a 'camera'. It takes lousy pictures, so I'm better off with my digital camera.

What brought all this up today? Well, last night I got a text message from a number that I did not recognize. The area code placed it in Akron, but I guess it could from there, or it could have been a 'kept' cell phone number. I was considering calling it to tell the person I don't text. I didn't. It didn't seem worth it. I keep meaning to go to my provider to see if I can remove the texting. I wouldn't miss it at all, and I think I would stop wondering about the strange text messages I get. Would I then get phone calls?